Driving is a scary thing. Many teenagers do not realize the dangers in driving. Yes, we hear about the tragic accident that happened down town, but do we fully understand the power we wield when we climb behind the wheel? So many teenagers just can't wait to get their license. To be "free" from their parents. Driving class is a sobering, but very beneficial experience. Some of you might take driving class to reduce insurance cost, some of you might take it because your parents made you, like me. Whatever the reason, it is something you will never forget. The things I have learned and seen in driving class will affect the way I drive for the rest of my life. Are there some things I wish I could forget?—probably (like red Asphalt 3), but sometimes it takes extreme and sobering circumstances to make us realize how one reckless driver can ruin so many innocent lives.

Driving class really should be required for everyone before receiving a license. In driving class you will learn how to practically apply what you have been told and get to test your reactions to situations on the road without risk (because Mr. Sabbadino has a break on his side 😉 ). Let's be better drivers then our parents, and maybe one day when you have kids (andr they take driving class) they will be better than us. "Those who don't learn from history are doomed to repeat it." – George Satanayana The same is true for driving. Learn from others' mistakes and experiences. Be willing to take the time to receive the instruction necessary to reduce your chances of being another tragic statistic!
